Spring break marks the mid-way point of the semester, and this is a good time to assess your progress. Here are some tips and resources to help you be successful in classes this spring:

1. Calculate your grade regularly – Make sure that you know where you stand in all of your classes. If you are in danger of not passing a class, remember that the deadline to withdraw from a course is March 21. Make sure to talk to Jill before you withdraw from a class to discuss potential financial aid and graduation issues.

2. Attend tutoring – Tutoring is available through TILT, the Native American Cultural Center, and also through academic departments.

3. Brush up on Study Skills – Schedule a meeting with Emily to talk through your study habits or plan to attend a TILT workshop to help you refocus for the second part of the semester.

4. Utilize your Professors and TA’s and their office hours – One of the best sources of support is your professor or TA. Instructors can help you with course content, but they can also assist with ideas for study techniques and exam preparation.

5. Use Study Groups – There are lots of benefits to studying with others. Organize study groups in advance of exams to maximize your study time.

6. See Jill or Emily with questions – If you do have questions or concerns about your courses, set up a time to meet with Jill or Emily!

- Review your graduation plan and make a list of classes you’re planning to take in the fall.

- Locate your registration date and time in RamWeb under “registration access date/time.”

- Complete registration ready before your registration date.

- Check for any holds on your account that will stop registration and resolve them before your registration date.

- Prepare any questions you’d like to discuss during your advising meeting in advance.

- You do not need to have an advising code to register for summer classes, but it is a good idea to have an advising meeting to discuss your summer schedule.
